And a Thought:

Last week I talked about being clothed with love and being happy with second place – with Christ taking first place in our lives. This week I'm pondering upon the times we are living in and the upcoming election. The distinction between Christians and those who do not follow Christ is again pause for thought when we see the choices the government is making. As Christians we cannot always follow the ways of this world. We are called to follow the laws of the land – Christ makes that guite clear, but our choices do not always follow the most popular route or make us feel very comfortable. We are simply not called to live the same way as non-believers. Knowing Christ means we know another way to live. This year's election gives us an opportunity to take a stand on some very controversial issues. It may not make us feel comfortable if the social "norms" are heading one way and God's word is heading us the other way, but it's not about comfort is it? This has been happening since Cain killed Abel. Just because it happens, it does not mean it is right. Think carefully and prayerfully about the issues. And pray for clear insight to see the distinction between righteous and wicked. Be alert, be on the look-out and be ready to share your reasons. And have a blessed week.
